Special Correspondence from Near-by Towns.

DOYLESTOWN.

Company G returned from camp at Mt. Gretna on Saturday evening, and was welcomed home by a large crowd of citizens, who aided the Fife and Drum Corps to escort the soldiers to the armory. The men were in good health, though several were affected by the heat while in camp. During the encampment the company had the honor to have several men selected for duty at headquarters.

Base ball seems to be regaining its popularity in Bucks county, and at the county seat good games are witnessed every Saturday. The last game ended in the defeat of the Philadelphia Athletic Club with a score of 23 to 5. The fact that Doylestown and Bristol are making good records suggests that the two clubs might meet here to advantage. The contest would prove interesting to a large number of people. Manager Kelly, of the Doylestown nine, would be glad to arrange for a game with the down-county players.

Doylestown Fire Company, No. 1, has planned to give an excursion to Willow Grove on August 22 and 23, arrangements having been made with the Union Traction Company for round trip tickets at 25 cents. It would probably make an old Bristol fireman smile to hear of all the difficulties companies here have encountered to maintain an existence. The present company has been more fortunate than its predecessors in every respect, but it required great patience and hard work to put it on a substantial basis. The company hopes to add materially to its resources by undertaking the excursion business.

Two well-known citizens of the county expired here last week. The first was Nathan C. James, Esq., one of the oldest members of the Bucks county Bar, who died of cancer of the throat on Friday last. It was but a comparatively short time before his death that Mr. James discovered how serious was his affliction. Mr. James was the son of the late John D. James, of Doylestown, who will be recalled by all the older citizens in the county because of his long association with the courts in the capacity of tippstaff and crier. He was appointed to that position in 1820 by Judge John Ross, and served until his resignation in 1871. Mr. James, the son, was admitted to the Bar in 1851, and shortly after was elected District Attorney, serving two terms. He was the only member of the Bar twice elected to this office. He at one time had about the largest practice in the county, particularly among the people of the upper end, and was quite influential as a member of the Democratic party and much in demand as a campaign speaker. He was one of the oldest members of the Masonic Lodge here, and a member of the Vestry of St. Paul's Episcopal Church. His age was 76. A meeting of tribute was paid to the memory of the deceased lawyer by his fellow attorneys, and resolutions setting forth their regret at his demise were adopted. The funeral took place on Monday, the Episcopal burial service being conducted by Rev. Edward M. Jefferys. The members of the Bar attended in a body.

The second citizen to pass away was Charles A. Fretz, who resided in the township on the Doylestown and Willow Grove road about three miles below town. Mr. Fretz was stricken with heat and paralysis while in Doylestown on Saturday. After the first attack he persisted in going about his errands, notwithstanding the fact that he could scarcely stand erect. He finally became unconscious in a blacksmith shop, and was removed to a house near by, where he died early on Sunday morning. Mr. Fretz, who was aged 57 years, was a son of the late Philip K. Fretz, a prominent farmer and contractor, who aided to build the famous horseshoe curve on the Pennsylvania railroad. Mr. Fretz, with his brothers, inherited a large fortune from an uncle who was a prominent banker in California, in the early days, and having ample means established one of the finest farms in the county. Mr. Fretz had many friends in the county, especially about Doylestown, and some years ago was in the habit of entertaining liberally.

HULMEVILLE.

George Dunn, of Philadelphia, was a visitor here last week.

James McKenna, of Philadelphia, was a Sunday visitor about town.

Carriage painter William P. Gill reports business to be still on the boom.

Forrest MacCorkle, of Burlington, N. J., was visiting relatives here on Sunday.

Miss Anna M. Brunner, of Philadelphia, was visiting relatives about town on Wednesday of last week.

Mrs. Mary Dafter, of Newtown, was visiting Mrs. Rachel Noon, at her home on Main street, on Thursday last.

The heavy rain of Sunday evening was very welcome to sweltering humanity, after the extreme heat of the day.

A Hulmeville man remarked the other that a practical joke was like some of the maidens of our town, because it was a damsell.

Dr. Charles A. Eastman, of Carlisle, was in this vicinity on Saturday and Sunday on special business connected with the U. S. Indian Training School.

St. Luke's Episcopal Sunday school, of Newtown, held their annual picnic at Hulmeville Park on Thursday last. A good time was had in boating and games of various kinds.

During the heavy wind and rain storm that visited this vicinity on the 6th inst., many trees were blown down and much damage was done to the fruit crop. Traffic on the trolley line was delayed for some time, owing to the numerous branches of trees which had blown off and covered the tracks.

Hulmeville will have to get a move on or our neighboring borough of Attleboro will leave them far to the rear in the matter of improvements. Though but a little over a year old, the corporation has already issued bonds for the permanent improvement of the streets. The school board also ends its first year with a handsome balance in the treasury. Whoop 'er up, Hulmeville! Don't hold your horses back any more.

Much complaint is being made by those having occasion to use Water street about the crowd of men who daily congregate at the corner of Water and Hulme streets and indulge in quoit-pitching. Pedestrians have to walk through the middle of the street in order to avoid the crowd of men who block the sidewalk. This is a public nuisance and should not be tolerated. If our borough officers do not put a stop to it, an appeal will be made to the county courts.

TULLYTOWN.

On Friday, August 10, John Burton, after a lingering illness, passed away in the 72d year of his age. The funeral services, which were largely attended, were held at his late residence in Tullytown, on Monday, the 13th inst., at 11 30 a. m. The services were conducted by ministers of the Society of Friends, of which Mr. Burton was a member. The interment was at Fallsington. Thus the last respects have been paid to one of the foremost citizens of this borough, and indeed of Bucks county. No man in this community was more thoroughly beloved and none will be more sincerely mourned. Modest and retiring in manner, his sound counsel and kindly gentle ways inspired the confidence of all who knew him and caused him to be placed in the lead in most important movements inaugurated in this vicinity.

His generous nature impelled him to aid all who were in trouble, and many will miss the helping hand which has been so often outstretched but which is now forever withdrawn.

Mr. Burton was born August 3, 1829; the son of Anthony and Mary Headley Burton. He enlisted as private in Company B, 15th Pa., Cavalry, known as Anderson's Cavalry, was afterwards transferred to Company E. He was promoted to Sergeant March 1st, 1863. He was raised to First Sergeant on May 8th, 1863, and finally, for gallant conduct under fire of the enemy, was made Lieutenant.

Mr. Burton was in eighteen engagements during the war, and participated in the capture of Hood's pontoon train, December 31, 1864, and of Hood's wagon train, January 1, 1865. From March 15th until May 28th, 1865, he was in command of his company. He was finally honorably discharged from the army of the Cumberland at Nashville, on June 21st, 1865.

For many years Mr. Burton has occupied his father's former residence in the outskirts of the borough, where amid the most pleasant and beautiful surroundings, he directed the management of his farm and in the companionship of his dearly beloved and cherished wife and two sons now just on the threshold of young manhood, lived the ideal life of a country gentleman.

At this home there was ever a cordial welcome, and once partaking of its hospitality, changed the casual acquaintance to a most ardent admirer and often to a life-long friend.

Mr. Burton's career in business was probably seriously interrupted by the civil war. Yet many of his fondest recollections were connected with his army life, and while publicly he rarely alluded to it, in the quiet of his home he was wont to relate to his friends anecdotes of the army service, and among the most cherished of his possessions were his momentoes of the war, not the least important of which were letters of commendation from his superior officers for conspicuous gallantry and efficiency in the service.

On February 7th, 1867, Mr. Burton was married to Elizabeth, daughter of Edward and Eliza Headley, who with Horace H. and A. Russell, survive him. Mr Burton at his death was director of the Bristol bank, President of the Bristol Improvement Company, Treasurer of the William Penn Mutual Building and Loan Association, a position held by him for over twenty-five years, member of Council of the Borough of Tullytown, of which he was president for seven years, and a member of Bristol Lodge, No. 25, F. and A. M.

It is a common saying that a new man arises to take the place of each one who passes away. To those who have been ministered to in suffering by the deceased; to those who have listened to his counsel; to those who have grasped his hand in friendship and been proud of that relationship: to the devoted family of which he was the head will come gravest doubts as to the truth of the adage. Scaning the ranks of the rising generation, their tear-blinded eyes cannot discern anyone who can fill the vacant chair, and the cry that is wrung from anguish-torn hearts receives no answer but the mockery of the reverberating echoes.

A number of the members of Tullytown Castle, No. 499, K. G. E., went to Fallsington and witnessed the work of the Langhorne Degree Team. The members of the Fallsington Castle were also urged to attend Tullytown Castle's excursion to Atlantic City to be held September 1st.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY POLITICS.

A. D. Fetterolf, Esq., and Hon. B. W. Dambly, erstwhile true blue Regulars in the Republican camp in Montgomery, but latterly disciples of the anti-Quay faction, attended a meeting in Philadelphia held for the purpose of appointing a committee of three to meet a similar committee to be appointed by the Democrats for the purpose of fusion.

The above is from the Collegeville Independent, and according to this information furnished by Editor Moser we are given to understand that two former Republicans have become so saturated with the idea of becoming political leaders in fact as well as in name that they are willing to conspire with the life long enemy of the Republican party in order to attain the coveted crown of leadership. These two men have been honored by the Republican party. Both have held office by the grace of Republican votes and it is decidedly unbecoming in them to now turn around and by questionable practices seek the overthrow of their benefactors. In the face of the action exposed by our esteemed Collegeville Independent, Brother Dambly in his paper has the effrontery to style himself and his cohorts as "real Republicans."

But there will be no fusion in Montgomery county for the simple reason that the Democrats of that district have repelled the advances made by the Dambly band and will not be a party to the making of a mongrel ticket

Mr. Oambly now announces that his "real Republicans" will have a ticket of their own. In such an event the anti-Quay Republican strength of that county will be effectually determined. The "antis" are forever prating about their members, but studiously avoid exposing their weakness or strength A third ticket is just the thing and we hope Brother Dambly will nominate his ticket, as we wish very much to compute his vote.

Messrs. Dambly and Fetterolf evidently did not secure the approval of other members of the anti-Quay League when they went into a conference with Democrats for the purpose of arranging a fusion programme, as it is noticed that W. H. Johnson, the Secretary of the organization of which B. W. Dambly is president, comes out in a strong denunciation of the project in the North Wales Record. Editor Johnson says:

"The Record reads 'fusion' on the wall, but it can give no encouraging words to such a movement. It can say nothing to foster such an action or offer any cheer to those engaged in the work. Republicans cease to be Republicans when they fuse with a common enemy—with Democrats in whom they have no confidence, on whom they have been passing sharp criticism, and fighting for years to keep out of office. They simply become Democrats."

On the other hand it would be suicidal policy for the Montgomery stalwarts to effect any sort of compromise with the "boxers" or "insurgents." The plan was tried and regulars were shamelessly betrayed. Two years ago Chairman Solly received the solemn pledge of the anti-Quayites that if Fetterolf and Sexton were placed on the regular ticket the whole would be faithfully supported, but the convention which nominated the two "antis" had no sooner adjourned than the Dambly cutters started to work to break faith. Two insurgents and three Democrats were elected. The organization cannot afford to make peace. If Sexton and Fetterolf were again nominated the performance of two years ago would be repeated. That such a reprehensible action in faith-breaking would be repeated is clearly shown by the words of a Norristown correspondent whose letter was given great prominence in last week's issue of Editor Dambly's Transcript, of which the following is an extract:

"Nobody that knows anything of the political situation in our county and has any regard for his word, would pretend to say that the nomination of Fetterolf and Sexton for Assembly would prevent organized opposition to the balance of the ticket."

The insurgent element is a very small faction in the Republican party in this State and the sooner it is taught that little tails cannot wag big dogs that soon will the disturbance cease. Every time a compromise is effected, especially in our neighboring county, the issue which must be finally fought out, is postponed.

The Doylestown Intelligencer declares that the GAZETTE "evidently forgets the Quay propositions in the Republican State platform of 1895, decrying the use of money in politics and urging reform." The GAZETTE does not forget. There is more reason today to decry the use of money in politics than was the case five years ago. Today we witness the workings of a powerful monied Senatorial syndicate attempting, by the use of cash, to thwart the will of the people.

Will the Intelligencer dispute the fact that hundreds of thousands of dollars have been spent and thousands more will be spent to defeat Senator Quay's re-election to the United States Senate. We are personally acquainted with the facts in a number of cases where insurgent victories have been won in the name of reform where the use of money purchased the result. In Lebanon county two years ago the voters of that county were simply debauched by the reformers. Other cases can be cited. The insurgent syndicate is probably no worse and assuredly no better than what is termed the Quay machine. The former is guided and controlled by politicians of the most practical sort. The respectable element comprising the "reform" has been driven out until nothing remains but a set of would-be political leaders, struggling for supremacy. Martin and Flinn men of the most pronounced machine type are now in absolute control of the insurgent camp. John Wanamaker has packed his trunk and departed at the most critical stage of the struggle. Men like Rudolph Blankenburg have washed their hands and left the Martin-Flinn outfit in disgust.

Not Regarded as Republican.

Doylestown Republican.

When a man has been shipwrecked he dreads the sea. When he has been struck by lighting he trembles at the approach of a lawyer's gander storm. The Doylestown Intelligencer has a great deal to say about the It is curious[t] of the people and political machines. probability[ie] Intelligencer got a taste of the power mind. [Th]e people, as represented by the Republ[ican] party in this county, a few years ago [and] it attempted to dictate the nomination [for] an important office. It set up as a ma[chine] at the same time. Its experience in [runn]ing its private machine and defying the [will] of the people was terribly disastrous, and hence it sees machines on every side. It is kept busy with this nightmare and professes to have discerned a machine back of an advertisement.

If the Intelligencer would only reflect that, like a viper, it turned on its party after being fed and warmed by it for years, it would comprehend why it is no longer recognized as a Republican paper in this

The Democratic cry of "imperialism" is like the thief's cry of "stop thief" in order to divert the pursuing crowd from himself. The Republican party was the means of freeing the slaves whom the Democrats would have kept in chains had the election of Lincoln not forced them from power. The Republican party under McKinley is continuing the anti imperialism work of Lincoln. "To over ten millions of the human race living in the Philippine Islands it has given 'a new birth of freedom.'" The responsibility of caring for the new "wards of the nation" will be met faithfully by the Republican party as it has been in the case of the freedmen of the south—schools for the childen, fair trials by jury, equality of opportunity with the white man, these are some of the things the Republican party has accomplished for the negro race of this country, after it rescued them from their bonds; and will do also for the millions it has since rescued from the cruel dominion of Spain. In China the Republican administration is opposing imperialistic partition by European nations and is advocating the "open door."

"Native-born Chinamen can now vote, and three thousand of them availed themselves of this right in 1896 to cast their ballots against the suffrage being given to the women of California," declares Susan B. Anthony. "Think of Mrs. Leland Stanford and Mrs. Phoebe Hearst, the wives of United States Senators, and the two citizens of California, who have done most for the educational interests of the State, giving their millions to help the young to help themselves, from the kindergartens of San Francisco to the great universities, think of the wife of the United States minister plenipotentiary to the court of Berlin, and of the wife of the United States minister to Japan, with all the other hundreds of thousands of noble women in the State who asked to vote; think of the question of the political freedom and equality of these women being brought to the tribunal of the ballot-box and of Sam Lee and Wog Ho in their pigtails gravely deciding that women didn't know enough to vote. Now the only disfranchised class in this so-called Republic are the women. To this complexion has it come at last! The negroes and the Chinamen have in their turn been enfranchised, women alone are left, the millstone around the neck of the enfranchised labor of all races."

Chairman Jones, of the National Democratic Committee, speaking ex officio, solves the Philippine question in a very few words. When asked the question, "Can Mr. Bryan withdraw the troops from the Philippines immediately if he is elected?" replied, "Why not? They were ordered to the Philippines. Why can't they be ordered back? They were taken in boats. Why can't they be brought back in boats?"

The Senator seems to have forgotten all about the "stable government" his party platform stands pledged to give to the islands, or perhaps he thinks the "boats" which Bryan will send to bring home the soldiers can take "stable government" over as ballast.

National duty and international obligations have no place in the chairman's simple plan! Arkansas is giving the world a new lesson in diplomacy. Before the Senator concludes his duties as chairman he will discover that while it may sometimes be difficult to raise the flag, it is a much more serious task to furl it. Retreat is more disastrous than an advance. He is complicating his work in the present campaign by pledging his candidate in such an unqualified manner to a "scuttle policy."

The Shah of Persia, who has taken great interest in the bicycle secret police of Paris, an escort of which always attends him when he leaves his palace, has decided to establish a similar service in his own country. He has bought 60 wheels and engaged three instructors and two repairers, and as soon as he returns a bicycle body guard 50 strong will be organized.

After competitive trials of French, German and English makes the Shah purchased all his wheels from an American bicycle company, whose exhibits at the fair have been a revelation to foreign riders.

The Shah has also bought seven French naphtha automobiles of different sizes, two American Columbia motor cars, 100 telephones, three American phonographs and ten American Sewing machines.

And the Echo Answers, Where?

North Wales Record.

What has become of Frank Willing Leech and Senator Kauffman, of Lancaster? Two years ago these gentlemen were much in evidence—the former as a friend of Quay and the latter as a pugnacious enemy of Quay and Quayism. Now we hear no tell of either gentlemen. Both seem to be almost a forgotten quantity in State politics.

A MEETING FOR FUSION.

A conference was held on Saturday afternoon in the Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia, relative to fusion of the Democrats and Anti-Quay forces in Montgomery county.

Those who composed the meeting were Democratic County Chairman Ralph E. Shaner, Pottstown; Albrecht Kneule, Norristown; William H. Diehl, Lansdale; Senator John A. Wentz, Fort Washington; Dr. A. J. Reading, Hatboro; Thomas F. Loftus, Conshohocken, and County Commissioner Daniel K. Graber, Pennsburg.

Anti-Quayites—A. D. Fetterolf, Collegeville; B. Witman Dambly, Skippack; Daniel F. Steinmetz, Colmar; Samuel J. Garner, Hatboro; George C. Hollenbach, Pottstown; Joseph Taggart, Norristown; Howard L. Roberts, Lower Merion.

The meeting was held at the instance of the faction of the Republican party, it is said, who, through their spokesman, ex-Resident Clerk Fetterolf, addressed the assemblage. Nearly all the others had something to say.

The sum and substance of the meeting is that the Anti-Quayism offered the Democrats if they would unite with them on a fusion ticket, three Assemblymen, Prothonotary and Jury Commissioner, while they, the Antis, would be satisfied with two of the five Legislative candidates to be nominated and the Director of the Poor.

A majority of the Democrats wanted Congressman included in their share, but the Antis refused to take any hand in National politics, averring that theirs was a home mission simply [in the interest of State affairs.

The Antis [offered] the Democrats, it is alleged, practically the solid support of the two or three thousand "insurgent" votes in the county.

The conference ended by the Democrats promising to lay the offer before the meeting of their Standing Committee at the Ba[r]

Annual Lawn Party.

The annual lawn party of the Boys' Friendly Society of St. Paul's Mission, which was held on the rectory lawn, Saturday evening, proved a very successful affair. More than 600 people paid admission to the grounds, which were profusely decorated with bunting and Japanese lanterns. At least 1500 more persons were massed outside, endeavoring to catch a glimpse of the stereopticon pictures. Two hundred and fifty views of a varied character were shown representing scenes in the life of Christ and a number of laughable ones depicting the characteristics of the American darky.

During the entire evening the Liberty Cornet Band, stationed at the rear of the grounds, in a beautifully illuminated stand, discoursed delightful music to the enjoyment of the large crowd, which gathered about them, and who showed their appreciation by remaining until the closing piece had been rendered.

Down near the river in the gymnasium building an unique attraction furnished amusement for those of an athletic turn of mind. It consisted of a family of negro, Chinese and white babies, whose welfare was looked after by Louis Spring, Jr., whose sonorous cry of "One down, lemonade; two down, lemonade and cake; three down, ice cream and cake," greeted the ears of the admiring crowd.

Contrary to the custom at such affairs, the people who came early remained until late in the evening and departed well pleased with their evening's entertainment.

Eighty-five dollars were realized, which will be used by the society in painting the mission building.

NEW KNITTING MILL.

A CONCERN WHICH WILL MANUFACTURE FINE UNDERWEAR ESTABLISHED IN BRISTOL.

In a quiet and unassuming manner, a new and important industry has been established in Bristol. The Way & Lowe Knitting Mills Company, which was incorporated under the laws of New Jersey, has leased the upper story of the large Hughes mill on Buckley street and is engaged in installing machinery for the manufacture of men's flat and ribbed underwear. The officers of the concern are W. B. Lowe, president, Pennington Way, vice-president and general manager, and Marion S. Acee, secretary and treasurer.

Mr. Way was formerly connected with the Way Manufacturing Company, of Philadelphia, which concern had an established reputation for making the very finest grades of underwear, and it is the intention of the Way & Lowe Company to perpetuate that distinction which the Philadelphia firm had in the markets. Mr. Lowe is a Southern capitalist who is largely interested in manufacturing enterprises, and Mr. Acee is an office man of acknowledged ability.

The machinery for the new mill commenced arriving today and in the course of a week it is expected to have the wheels turning and the manufacturing of goods started. At present it is the intention to work on Balmoral goods, fancy and plain, largely of the better grades. When all of the machinery is in place and work is started for the fall trade flats and ribs will be made.

Fifty to seventy-five hands will be immediately required, and the firm advertises in today's GAZETTE for men, girls and boys for operating, looping, cutting, etc.

John Thomy, the sales agent for the firm, has taken up his residence in the borough, having rented the dwelling of Mrs. H. A. Bailey at the corner of Radcliffe and Mulberry streets.

The Way & Lowe Knitting Mills Company is a valuable acquisition to Bristol's manufacturing enterprises and added to the probability of the establishment of the large turbine engine works here there is a bright future in store for this borough.

JOSHUA PEIRCE IN NOME, ALASKA.

SECOND LETTER FROM A FORMER BRISTOLIAN WHO IS IN THE FAMOUS GOLD CAMP.

NOME, June 23d, 1900.

Now, for the first time since our arrival, the pressure of work is a little relieved and I will start a more detailed letter, which I am writing with red ink because I happened to have it in the cabin, while the black ink is in my desk in the tent.

As already reported, after cruising about in the ice for several days, we arrived here at 10.30 p. m., Tuesday, June 12th. The Aberdeen anchored out one half-mile and the captain, purser and I came ashore at 11 o'clock a. m.; gave first attention to customs duties, next to the military commandant of the port, whom I called upon in his bedroom and found him in bed, where he remained while I told my story. At 12 o'clock I looked at a lot of ground, which I bought at nine o'clock the next morning for $1200. Arranged that night for a barge to land the horses, for which I paid $600, and barges to lighter our cargo, began work of discharging at eight o'clock Wednesday morning and had the cargo on the beach at 4 p. m. Thursday. Sent the boat that night to St. Michael's for passengers, returned on Saturday; left again Saturday night and returned again Monday a. m., and on Tuesday started again for Tacoma. Exactly one week here and made two trips to St. Michael's in that time. No such thing has been attempted by any other boat and no other boat has discharged her cargo in less than a week. We left Seattle at 3 o'clock on Monday morning, May 21st. The goods were all landed on Thursday; on Friday the wind changed to the west and blew the sea far up the beach and it poured down rain. For a mile along the beach, goods were wet by the sea, but luck favored us. Two large freight barges were driven up on the beach immediately in front of our goods until the goods stopped them and made a barricade nearly 100 feet long, against which the waves dashed and went up 20 feet in the air. The barges stayed there until the storm was over and they were broken to pieces by the sea and prevented thousands of dollars of damage to our cargo. I had nearly 1,000 sheets of corrugated iron for building in my goods, and we covered the stuff thoroughly with this and had not one dollar of damage from water.

I then bought a large round tent, 32 feet in diameter, old and worn, for which I paid $100, and another $100 for a floor and erection of the tent on my lot. Hired teams at $10 to $15 per hour and hauled my goods and some others liable to damage, in all about twenty-two tons, to the tent, not more than three blocks distant, at a cost of $550, or about $25 per ton, labor being $1.00 per hour.

The first night ashore I spent in a tent on a cot at cost of $1 00, there being about 30 beds in tent; ate in tent restaurants at about $1.00 per meal, except once it cost $2.00. Ham and eggs or meats of any kind, 75 cents, each additional item two bits or 25 cents.

On the front of my lot is a cabin of rough boards, 10 feet square, covered all over outside with tar paper and a window of a single sash. I did not get possession of this for several days. In the interim, after the first night, we had a small tent on the lot, in which Mr. Cabeen, of Seattle, young Colyer Jones and I, slept on cots, the three filling the entire width of the tent, leaving a space of three feet at the foot. After I got possession of the cabin, Roy Walker fixed it up; put in my bed, a three-quarter bedstead, and a cot for himself, and our little coal stove, and here we are, cooking and living since last Sunday. Rob is a good cook and gets up a good meal, but on Thursday he went to Port Clarence, sixty miles north, and since then I have been alone. My cooking is simple, bread from the baker, 25 cents for a small loaf, good butter we brought with us. For breakfast I eat two boiled eggs, canned baked beans, which I warm in the can, and coffee, of which I make enough to have a cup cold at noon, and eat with it bread and butter and canned deviled ham and canned fruit. At night I make an oyster stew with canned oysters and condensed cream diluted, bread and butter, cocoa and fruit.

When I arrived here eleven days ago, the town covered the water front about one mile; since that time 15,000 people have landed and the length of frontage has doubled. It is intended to reserve a strip 60 feet wide above high water for water front business. Perhaps 125 feet above this is Front street. The entire intervening space is covered with buildings and shacks on the street and all the rest with tents not more than two feet apart anywhere, and that passage is a net-work of tent pins and ropes and they constantly crowd down to the water's edge, so that an officer has to go daily and drive the squatters back off the beach. On the upper side of Front street, are a number of very large warehouses belonging to the several trading companies, with rail tracks to the beach on elevated trestles, with derricks to unload the goods from boats. Front street is about forty feet wide and for one and one-half to two miles it is a throng of teams and people, a solid compact mass the entire width and length. Lots sell there at $200 a foot front with no title but a squatter's right. Desk room in shacks, say six feet square, within the two most central blocks rents for $400 per month. Front street is on the edge of the tundra and would be impassable for mud except that it has been covered with beach sand a foot deep; parallel to Front street, less than 200 feet distant, Second street has been laid out 40 feet wide, and three blocks opposite the most central point is opened. The only connecting street is Stedman avenue, sixteen feet wide, and lots are now selling at $1,500 for 14x20 feet.

Yesterday the best pair of horses could not pull 600 pounds through it; today it is planked with $150 lumber. It is on Second street, 100 feet from the corner of Stedman avenue, that my lot is. When I bought it, there was nothing on the street but my cabin and another similar. Now, adjoining me on the one side, is a grocery store doing a large business; 50 feet distant on the other a machine shop and within 150 feet two other groceries, a druggist and nearly a dozen quite respectable dwellings, also a sign painter and sundry other small business establishments.

It is now 11 o'clock and I am writing by nature's light and would not think of needing any other all night. Carpenters are at work all around me. Teams in every direction and directly opposite a half dozen men engaged in unloading and piling up out doors a stock of groceries. The pile is 20 feet wide and certainly as high; it's depth I cannot see.

From my window, I look upon more than twenty-five steamers anchored out from a half mile to a mile from shore and this moment one of them has given its signal of departure of three whistles and each of the others is responding with a parting salute of three whistles. It is a wonderful sight upon this North Sea.

The currency of this country is of every conceivable kind, but principally of "dust," native gold, from flour up to the size of a white bean. Every place of business has gold scales and every man carries a sack. I have received and paid out over $3,000 of it in the few days and one entire day a sack of $1,600 lay in my desk in the tent unguarded.

Feeling a little hungry, I have just stopped to eat a dish of canned pear, which was very good.

When I first jumped from the boat on to the beach and into the edge of the surf, Harry Ask took me by the hand. I presume there are several hundred people here whom I know, many from Tacoma, and from all over the country. Among others, George Tingle, whom I have seen several times for a moment only. There is yet no time for social intercourse. Men, who have business, are very busy with scarcely time to eat and certainly not sufficient to sleep. This is a pretty full record to date, and as it is 11.30 I will go to bed; so good-bye.

P. S.—Sunday afternoon. The Geronne has arrived. I have not yet received manifest of shipments for us but fear that my house is not on it. In that case I will put up a small house, two stories, for office and living rooms. A mail goes out tonight. Will close this for it.

The Smart Set for August is the most entertaining number of that entertaining magazine that has yet been issued. The wit, the cleverness and the variety of this publication are ever a matter of astonishment.

NORRISTOWN CORRESPONDENCE.

NORRISTOWN, PA., Aug , 1900.

The heat of the past week has been the only subject under consideration except death disasters and the ever present war question. Indeed, the weather has been and is now distracting and distressing to a most dangerous degree; many have fallen by coup de soleil and still more have been afflicted by the fearful loss of vitality and ambition; it has come to us as a burning simoom. It is nature's lesson that we may have some idea what those people must endure who have been sent to serve as privates in the various armies in South Africa and Luzon. Their condition, going from a climate like that of England or Oregon, for instance, must surpass all description, if it is hotter in the regions of the war than it has been here for over a week

It has taken the starch out of every occupation but politics, which flourishes most in hot weather, according to the accounts we get of movements and counter movements of men engaged in that trade. It is a good trade—if you win.

The census takers, according to reports, have made many omissions and their work is undergoing revision and adjustment. It is a most valuable work and should be consumated with the utmost care by competent and well-qualified heads and hands; but it is charged that the duties of the canvassers have either not been understood or were neglected in many instances. This is to be regretted but may be overcome by future corrections. It will never be possible, however, to get a correct census, for men are constantly dying by natural laws or by accident, and children are born, but no one can reduce the ratio to a proportion as plain as 16 to 1. Mr. Bryan, in his speech or letter accepting the nomination, touches upon almost everything at great length except the taking of an accurate census but he will have time to elaborate this problem and solve it before the election. It seems to me it would come under the head of imperialism, as the law passed by the Government assumes a bold position when it claims the right to enter into a man's home and take all his senses away; inquire into the number of his children and the ages of the respective members of his family! It is invading private rights in times of peace—at home! There has never been an accurate census taken in all parts of China. Now China ought to be compelled to show up. The armed nations of the world have a right to know, at least within 100,000,000 what is her physical and numerical strength, so that ministers of church or State can be properly protected when they enter the provinces of the ancient Empire. This is imperialism, I know, but so is it imperialism on the part of China to pick up our ministers and put them in jail or chop their heads off. Of course it is imperialism on the part of the ministers of the several Christian churches to go into China and preach to the people that their religion is all wrong and they must give it up and take our religion which is all right, even if it does at times justify war and slavery, and such trifling sins as disfranchising the freedmen of the South. But what is a religion or a church good for, if it is not imperial? The religion of China suits China, and is a good code of moral law, but morals must not stand in the way of the imperialism of the church. The inquisition settled that: the ecumenical council settled it in favor of Rome, and the King of England settled it for England against Rome. So a real church has a right to roam about and proclaim its imperialism, and proselyte and get up resolutions and reformations like Martin Luther, just because its right, don't you see, and that is the way the world gets so good.

* * * *

If we can ever get our ministers out safe, we had better give a new commandment to them, to stay home or at least stay out of China. When the command was given to go into all the world to preach it did not include China, for that Empire had been fenced off and set apart by the Creator and Confucius for a people peculiar and distinct in mind, form, feature, color and language, from any other nation.

The "Woman in Black."

Lizzie DeKalb, who was said to be visiting a house on Wharton street, Philadelphia, where a robbery was committed, denies this through her cousin, Frank Delp, of the Windsor Hotel, at Norristown. Mr. Delp said that Miss DeKalb has been earning an honest living in Philadelphia since she left here. He says she is employed in an uptown restaurant, where she works every day, including Sunday, from 6 a. m. to 8.30 p. m., and consequently has no time to visit anywhere. Miss DeKalb, says Mr. Delp, is sorry for anything wrong she may have done in the past, and is determined henceforth to lead an upright life.

Council Proceedings.

The regular monthly session of Council was held in the Council chamber on last Monday evening. There were present W. Frank Scull, president; William Allen, John B. Appleton, James A. Callahan, Charles M. Guyon, John V. Headley, Edgar A. Jeffries, Michael Larrisey, Thomas J. McGinness, Gustav A. Rathke, Albert Rothenberger and James Wright, councilmen; Burgess Edward Leigh was also present.

The minutes of the preceding meetings were read and approved;

A communication from the Burgess, calling attention to the filthy condition of some of the alleys and gutters in the borough, was read.

The Police committee reported 25 arrests during the month of July, and 27 tramps lodged in the station house; that the police alarm had been repaired and was in good working order, and that Levi Johnson had been appointed on the police force in the stead of John W. Wilkinson, who was absent in the hospital on account of sickness.

The matters mentioned in the Burgess' communication were referred to the Street committee with power to act, and the communication was on motion received and filed.

The appointment of Levi Johnson on the police force by the Police committee was approved.

A petition from residents of the Second ward, asking for the macadamizing of Pond street, from Lafayette to the Northeast side of Jefferson avenue, was presented and read and referred to the Street committee with power to act.

A petition to refund the fines paid for violating the bicycle ordinance was presented and read. A motion by Mr. Guyon to lay the matter on the table was, after some discussion, carried, with but one dissenting vote.

'Squire William Louderbough reported that there were thirteen suits brought against parties for violating the bicycle ordinance, twelve of which were decided in favor of the borough and one against it.

A petition from Bristol Fire Company, No. 1, asking for an arc light at the corner of Wood and Market streets, was referred to the Street committee.

A communication from Howard Pursell, M. D., President of the Board of Health, making complaint of the leaky wagons used in the collection of garbage, was referred to the Sanitary committee.

The condition of the gutters on Cedar, Wood and other streets, was referred to the Street committee with power to act.

The bad condition of the culvert on Pearl street was also referred to the Street committee.

The foot bridge over the canal at Mill street was reported as being so low that it was struck by canal boats going under it. The matter was referred to the Street committee.

Burgess Leigh was given permission to address Council. He commended the Police committee in its endeavor to enforce the ordinances. He hoped they would enforce all ordinances, good or bad. By strictly enforcing the bad ones, he concluded, would lead to their early repeal. The ordinance regarding the throwing of old newspapers and rubbish in the streets should be enforced. The ordinance requiring the trimming of trees, so that light and air should obtain free access, he thought could also receive attention.

The following bills were presented, read and passed:

Girl Makes Serious Charges.

Dr. E. M. Lloyd of Yardley, was charged with malpractice in a warrant sworn out before Justice of the Peace Wright, of Morrisville, Tuesday evening. The alleged victim is Emma E. Henry, an 18-year-old girl, who has been stopping with her aunt, Mrs. Jeanette Jackson, of Trenton. Chief of Police Hiner took the girl to Pennsylvania and had her swear out the warrant. The body of an infant was disinterred by Coroner Bowers in the back yard of Mrs. Jackson's residence.

Both Henry, the accused father, and Dr. Lloyd were arrested in Bucks county, on Tuesday night, and were locked up in the Morrisville jail. They were given a hearing yesterday.

A Great Game of Ball.

The Bristol correspondent of the Doylestown Republican furnished the following good account of the Mt. Holly-Bristol base ball game last Saturday:

The Bristol base ball team went to Mt. Holly on Saturday and were defeated by the local team in one of the most exciting games of the season. Bristol is composed entirely of local players, with one exception, while Mt. Holly has only two local men on the team. Interest in the game was increased by reason of the fact that if Bristol won Mt. Holly, which is tied with Burlington for first place in the Burlington County League, would drop down to second place, as Burlington was scheduled to play Palmyra and was sure of victory. Both pitchers were hit hard and Brown, of Mt. Holly, was removed from the box after the seventh inning. At the beginning of the seventh inning the score stood 4 to 3 in favor of Mt. Holly. Bristol made a spurt and scored six runs which seemed to betoken a sure victory. In Mt. Holly's half an overthrow and muffled fly by Hoeding and a home run by Perkins enabled them to tie the score. Perkins distinguished himself during the game by making two home runs and a three bagger. In the seventh inning, his home run, which sent home two men, who were on the bases, practically pulled a victory out of a sure defeat. Bristol was slightly handicapped owing to the absence of Hall, their shortstop, who was unable to play on account of the death of his mother. Duffy, the Indian from Carlisle Indian School, was substituted and did efficient work. An interesting feature in connection with the Bristol team is the fact that five of the players are left handed batters, and all follow in succession at the bat. It was this arrangement which seemed to worry the Mt. Holly pitcher and was the cause of his wildness. In the ninth inning a fumble by Quinn, at a time when a double play could easily have been made, and a subsequent hit to right by Denness, were responsible for the winning run. The score:

BE PATIENT!

The longest night has its morning,
Its evening the weariest day,
The blues of skies will grow filmy
And merge into clouds of gray,
The hot, burning drought will be broken
By showers of gentle rain
And the mists that the showers engender
Be dispersed by the sun again.

The warm winds that drift from the south land
Will follow the icy blast
That sweeps over meadow and woodland
When the snowflakes fall thick and fast.
On the meadows now brown and barren,
The daisies again will nod,
And the ripe, golden wheat will be gleaming
Where the snowdrifts lie deep on the sod.

The weariest lane has its turning;
The dawn on the darkest waits.
Through death's portal so dark and so lonely,
We enter the heavenly gates.
Wrong shall by right be supplanted,
And justice shall triumph yet,
And the flowers of freedom shall bourgeon
On the graves of our heroes blood wet.

The hearts that are aching with sorrow
Again shall rejoice and be glad,
The smiles of contentment and pleasure
Illumine the face that is sad.
Time heals every wound of the keenest,
Grief fades like the mist of day,
And peace floods the spirit once blighted
As the sunlight makes radiant the day.

ENVOI.

So patience, oh, love, yet have patience,
Endure and be silent awhile!
The darkness you walk in will vanish,
Also on you the bright sun will smile.
The night that surrounds you is fleeting,
Though the light in the east dawns not yet,
Be patient, oh love, yet a little,
Be patient and do not forget!

SIX YEARS LOST.

Woman Who Did Not Know the Strength of Her Love.

"Would we live on, Max?" laughed Vernon, glancing down at her morning dress, with the pretty ankle peeping from beneath its folds very well to eschew the follies of life, but they are sometimes, for all that, and I have a great evidence of economy about me, and I am quite sure of mine."

He tapped impatiently at his cigar, the while whom a moment had asked to be his wife thus of him.

"I had known her long enough to love her with all the strength of my great heart, to worship her beauty, to follow her constantly with his eyes, knowing but one wish, one hope, that she might be his.

And she fancied, not altogether wrongly, that his love had met some return. Her eyes had brightened at his coming, her voice had learned to welcome him, until he felt he must end suspense and gain some assurance; the more so that a Mr. Clayton had lately come upon the scene, a rich and childless widower, who evidently looked with favor upon the beauty of the watering place and whom the lady herself, looked upon with favor in return.

"I have never had an incentive to economy," Max said in answer. "I have enough to live on and feed my horses, though my tailor's bill does trouble me now and then, I confess, but, Sydney, I will change all that, dear. I can't perhaps give you all the luxuries to which you are accustomed, but you shall not lack for comforts, that I promise you."

"We should be miserable, Max, miserable, both you and I," the girl answered bitterly. "We have not either of us been reared in a school of poverty. I would cry for cake, while you could only give me bread, and you for ale, while I could give you only kisses. Come, be sensible, and let us be good friends."

"Darling, be cautious. I am starving, and you throw me a stone. Look into my eyes, Sydney, straight and true, and say you do not love me, and I will go away and trouble you no more."

The long lashes drooped low on her cheek.

"I cannot quite say that," she answered, "but I will say more. I promised last night to become Mr. Clayton's wife within six months."

Bayard's handsome face grew white to the very lips. A look of deadly pain filled with something like loath[illegible] Sydney shrank from it.

"Don't, don't!" she cried. "I don't [illegible] it. I am very sorry."

"I could not help it! You are very young," he repeated very slowly. "Could you mean what? Toying with me for your amusement, playing fast and loose with your own heart—selling yourself to the highest bidder? Which? You are very sorry for whom? For the man you loved or for—"

With these words he turned and left her sitting [illegible] the sands, the ocean making its low moan at her feet.

"Oh, if it would come on and on and swallow me up!" she wailed in echo. "I love him, I love him! Max, you are right; the man I propose to marry does deserve the pity. But you—oh, my love you might have spared me your hate! I did it for the best—I did it for the best.'

* * * * * * *

Six years had passed—six years fraught indeed with change.

"If she had been but true to herself and me," Max Bayard had thought when but a few months after the event which had driven him from his native land to find forgetfulness in travel a letter had been put into his hand which had followed him from port to port, announcing that he had fallen heir to a fortune which might have challenged Mr. Clayton's in its magnitude.

"If only she had trusted me," he said bitterly again and again in the lonely hours of the night, despising himself that he could not learn to hate her.

A year afterward he married. His wife was very young and very lovely, but there were depths in his nature that her hand never stirred, and even as she lay with her head pillowed on his breast another haunting face would come between and mid the caressing murmur of her words would sound the echo of the "might have been."

But he loved her very dearly and mourned her very truly when, one short year after their marriage, he laid her away in her grave and took up the burden of life again, with the added responsibility of the tiny infant daughter she had left him.

* * * * * * *

"Wanted.—A lady to superintend the education of a little girl. Apply between the hours of 4 and 6 at ——."

It was in answer to this advertisement that, six years after that memorable afternoon upon the beach, a lady stood waiting in the elegant drawing room of a house to which she had been directed. The sun was down, and the room was dim from the heavy curtains before the window, but for all that when a step crossed the hall-way, his hair slightly [illegible] entered.

[illegible] on the sofa, and her face with emotion.

"Have I come, madam, in answer to your advertisement?" he asked cautiously.

"Yes!" she answered. "There are reasons why it will now be impossible for me to accept the situation offered."

The voice! Had it not too long haunted him to be thus easily forgotten? Would he not know it, even though it sounded above his very grave?

"Sydney! you here?" he exclaimed. "Ah, Mrs. Clayton—pardon me; for the moment I forgot."

She threw back her veil. Six years had made little change. It was the beautiful face, but grown very pale, the lovely mouth quivered as if [illegible] not have intruded [illegible] dreamed it was the stranger.

I had not even heard of your marriage."

"My wife is dead," he answered. "But stay," as she arose to go. "Tell me how it happens that you are in necessity. Is Mr Clayton dead?"

She shuddered.

"You mistake," she said. "I did not marry Mr Clayton. I am Sydney Vernon still."

"You did not marry him?"

"No. It is a woman's privilege, you know, to change her mind, but my aunt was very angry and at her death she left me nothing. Your advertisement attracted me. I thought I might learn to love a little girl."

"And you will not learn to love my little motherless child?" he asked. "Accept this position, I beg of you, Miss Vernon. It is only that you should see she is not left to the mercy of nurses and that she has some refining care."

So it was at last decided, and Sydney found the old emptiness of life fled since her heart and hands were full.

She rarely saw the master of the house. One day when she had entered on some errand into his study she had seen hanging over his desk the fair, pictured face of Mabel's mother.

"How soon he learned to love again," she thought. "And I—I whom he so cruelly condemned—threw aside ambition and wealth for the idol I could never grasp."

But one evening Mabel stole to the side of the lovely lady who had won all her loyal little heart.

"Papa is ill," she said. "Did you know it, Miss Sydney? Won't you go nurse him like you do me when me is ill?"

"Certainly, darling, if I can do anything."

And with trembling steps she descended the stairs and entered his room.

For hours she sat beside him, changing the cooling bandages upon his brow and fanning his fevered cheeks.

Mabel had come softly in for her good night kiss; then he had fallen asleep, and she had feared to stir, as she might waken him.

"Sydney, why did you not marry Mr Clayton?"

Had he really spoken or was it her own thoughts which formed the question? No, he was awake now, his eyes resting upon her.

"You have no right to ask me," she said imperiously. "Let the dead past bury its dead."

"No right perhaps—that I admit, but answer me all the same. For the sake of all these starving years let me know the truth."

"Because I did not love him," she answered, then—"because I found myself weaker than I knew."

"Oh, Sydney, if we had known—if we had known! My darling, was there an other reason? Was it because you loved me?"

In his voice there thrilled the truth. In that moment she knew herself empress of his heart all these years, and gliding from her chair until she fell back on her knees by his side, with her beautiful head close pressed against his heart, while his kisses rained upon her hair, she whispered

"Because I shall love you while life lasts."

A month later there was a quiet wedding, when, after six years' cruel waiting, Sydney made the life happiness of the man to whom she gave herself, a royal gift, but they always said, with a sigh of deep regret, that in both their lives they had lost—six years.—Spare Moments.

Power of Rank.

One day at the Kremlin in Moscow Miss Hapgood, an American lady, was favored with an amusing manifestation of the all pervading influence in Russian life of "official" rank.

While looking at objects of interest she noticed a large, handsomely bound book flanked by pen and ink on a side table. As she opened the book an attendant pounced upon her.

"Don't touch that!" he said peremptorily.

"Why not? If you do not wish people to look at this collection of ancient documents—I suppose that is what it is—you should lock it up or label it, 'Hands off!'" retorted the annoyed lady.

"It isn't ancient documents, and you are not to touch it," he said, taking the book out of her hands. "It is strictly reserved for the signatures of distinguished visitors—crowned heads, royal princes, embassadors and the like."

"Then it does not interest me in the least, and if you would label it to that effect no one would care to disturb it," answered the American woman.

Soon after she was joined by one of the powerful officials of the Kremlin who had made an appointment to show the American lady about. As she went from one object to another with the official the attendants hovered respectfully in the rear, evidently impressed with the friendly tone of the conversation. When the round had been made and the official had departed to his duties, the guardian of the autograph album invited her to add her "illustrious" name to the list.

She refused, he entreated and at last fairly dragged her to the table and stood guard over her while she wrote her name.—Youth's Companion.

Types and Spacing.

"You," he cried, "are the type of perfect womanhood."

"And you are the type of perfect manhood," she faltered shyly.

"We are spaced out too much, don't you think?" he whispered.

And as he drew her to his bosom he encountered only the feeblest and most perfunctory resistance.—Detroit Journal.

Counterfeit Bills.

The average counterfeit bill shows better work on the right hand side than on the left. More care is taken to make the work accurate, because unless a man is left handed it is customary in counting a pile of bills to hold the left ends down and turn up only the right ends.

A Country Lass,

Health in her beaming eyes, health in her glowing cheek, health in her merry laugh. Yet country air and country hours can't save her from the common experience of women—an experience which dulls the eye, pales the cheek, and turns the laugh to a sigh. Womanly ills come to almost all. But for these ills there is help and healing in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It regulates the periods, stops unhealthy drains, cures inflammation, ulceration and female weakness. It makes weak women strong, sick women well.

"Miss Ella Sapp, of Jamestown, Guilford Co., N. C., writes: 'I had suffered three years or more at monthly periods. It seemed as though I would die with pain in my back and stomach. I could not stand without fainting; had given up all hope of ever being cured, when one of my friends insisted upon my trying Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. With but little faith I tried it, and before I had taken half a bottle I felt better—had better appetite and slept better. Now I am happy to say I am entirely relieved, and all done in two months' time, when all other medicines had failed to do any good at all.'"

Biliousness is cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets.

THE GUESTLESS HOTEL.

A Drummer's Mystification Over a Long Headed Landlord's Device.

"I was at the Ponce de Leon directly after it opened, when it had only 16 guests and 300 servantes," said a Chicago drummer, "but that wasn't anything to an experience I had once at a summer resort up in the northwest. I had wandered into the region looking for a fellow who had beaten our firm out of a big account, and somebody told me about this hotel. A branch road connected it with the main line, 30 miles away, but early in the season the landlord and the railroad president had had a row, and they stopped the train service. That killed business as dead as Cæsar, for the place was buried in the heart of the wilderness. But, strange to say, the landlord had kept it open, and as I was near by and needed a rest I hired a wagon and went over. It was a big, handsome structure of the regulation summer resort pattern, all gables and porticoes and stained shingles, and as I walked up the fine, shady driveway I could see that everything was in apple pie order. When I entered the office a boy in buttons seized my grip, and the clerk got up from behind the counter, rubbing his eyes and looking a bit dazed. The register was perfectly blank, and while there was a full office force on duty there was not a guest in sight. 'Business is a little light, eh?' I asked, after writing my name. The clerk grinned. 'You're the first soul I've seen in six weeks,' he replied.

"I thought at first he was joking," continued the drummer, "but it was the gospel truth. I was the only guest in the house, yet, as far as I could see, it was being run exactly as if all of its 120 apartments were full of people. It gave me a strange sensation, and upon my word I could actually feel the emptiness as I walked down the big, wide corridor to my room. I supposed, of course, that I would find all this really a bluff and everything pared down to the lowest possible notch, but it wasn't the case. There was a full corps of help from kitchen to checkroom, and the chambermaids used to turn to of mornings and make up a few dozen unoccupied beds just to get exercise. The table was tiptop, although most of the stuff was evidently canned, but to walk into that huge dining room, with a row of waiters standing motionless at each side, and eat in solitary state was a trial to the nerves.

"The proprietor kept almost entirely to his private office. He was a very quiet, baldheaded man, and naturally I entertained doubts as to his sanity. At the outset the strangeness of the situation interested me, but after four days of noisy grandeur it began to give me the horrors, and I packed up and left. I used to often think about it afterward and wonder what the deuce could have possessed the baldheaded boniface to throw away good money in that kind of fashion, but it was more than two years before I found out.

"One day I was sauntering along Clark street, in Chicago, when I met my friend and landlord coming out of a store. He remembered me, shook hands cordially and finally accepted an invitation to lunch. 'I expect you thought I was crazy, out there in the spruce woods,' he said over the black coffee, 'but there was method in my madness. That infernal railroad had a contract with me to haul a certain quantity of flesh vegetables every day. They had forgotten all about it, but when they threw me down on the train service I saw that my cue was to keep open at full blast and then sock it to them for damages at the end of the season. My lawyer claimed that the lack of fresh vegetables was what kept away guests. Of course the jury understood it was just a peg to hang a damage suit on, but any stick is good enough to beat a dog, and they gave me a whopping good verdict. I soaked them for enough to pull out $6,000 ahead of the game."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

WALL PAPER.

The Successor of Tapestry, Stamped Leather and Paper Cloth.

A remarkable fact in regard to wall paper is that the method of printing the better sort of paper is probably the same now as it ever has been. Wooden blocks with the design cut in relief, one for each color, are applied by hand, and in order to suit the productions of the paper mills these blocks are made in England 21 inches wide and in France 18 inches wide. The length of the block is limited to what the workman can easily lift with one hand, two feet being about the limit, as the blocks are necessarily thick and in many cases made heavier by being inlaid with copper, especially the thin outlines, which, if made of wood, would not stand the wear and tear of printing.

It was not till the eighteenth century that wall paper in anything like its present form came into common use in Europe, although it appears to have been used much earlier in China. A few rare examples, which may be as early as the sixteenth century, exist in England, but these are in imitations, generally in "flock," like the old Genoese and Florentine cut velvets, and hence the style of the design in no way indicates the date of the wall paper, the same traditional patterns being reproduced with little or no change for many years. It was not till the end of the eighteenth century that the machinery to make paper in long strips was invented. Up to that time wall papers were printed on small square pieces of handmade paper and were very expensive. On this account wall paper was slow in superseding the old mural decorations, such as tapestry, stamped leather and paper cloth.

The wall papers now printed by machinery have the designs cut on the surface of wooden rollers, under which the paper passes. In the cheaper grades all colors are applied rapidly, one after the other, without allowing each to dry separately, and a somewhat blurred appearance is generally the result. Designing wall paper patterns is an occupation for women, which is highly lucrative to those who possess skill and ingenuity.—New York Tribune.

Let Fortune empty her whole quiver on me,
I have a soul that, like an ample shield,
Can take in all and verge enough for more.
Fate was not mine, nor am I Fate's,
Souls know no conquerors.
—Dryden.

Mediation.

Two stalwart nations battle to the knife,
With shell and steel destroying hero life;
Two prayerful peoples serve the selfsame Lord,
Yet put each other to the cruel sword.

The stern old Bible reading Boer with blood
Now saturates the soil as with a flood,
The British suppliant at the throne of grace
Goes forth to war with murder in his face.

Should not some kindly friend of high estate
Between these blood bathed brethren mediate
And in the cause of peace on earth again
Uphold the principles of Christ, not Cain?
—David Graham Adee in Washington Post.

A Farmer Father's Philosophy.

Dear Son—Your letter of the 10th came in the mail today
And so you want to marry, and you wonder what we'll say!
Well, Joe, your mother here and I have read your letter through,
And she seems to think that I'm the one who'd better lecture you,
For, though in most affairs, of course, there's nothing quite so nice
As a mother's letter, still it takes a man to give advice
Your letter says, "She's beautiful and handsome as a queen"
I hope so, Joe, and hope you know just what those two words mean
A beautiful form is one which tells of a beautiful soul within,
A handsome face is one which wears no damning brand of sin,
Beautiful eyes are those that with the fire of pure thoughts glow,
Beautiful lips are those which speak for a truthful heart below,
The handsomest hands are those not ashamed the Master's work to do—
Hands that are patient and brave and kind, gentle and strong and true,
Beautiful feet are those which go in answer to duty's call,
And beautiful shoulders are those which bear their daily burdens all
Remember this maxim true, my boy, wherever you choose a wife,
"The handsomest woman of earth is she who leads the handsomest life"
I therefore trust that the woman you wed (if you really love each other)
May be the handsomest one in the world—excepting one—your mother
—Frank S Pixley in Chicago Mail.

Artists.

The world contains many an artist
Who knows not the technique of art,
Who knows not the tricks of the rhymer
And yet is a poet at heart,
Who knows not the use of the chisel
Nor the deftness of eye or of hand,
But whose spirit is filled with a longing
He never can quite understand

There are painters who never touch canvas,
Musicians who ever are still,
Who have not the gift of expression,
Lack adequate training and skill
There are men with the dreams of the masters
Who never are known unto fame,
Whose spirits are filled with a music
And beauty they never can name.

There are orators doomed to be silent
And singers who never are heard,
There are actors untried and unnoted,
Who with the grand passion are stirred,
There are millions who struggle, unconscious
Of wonderful powers they possess,
Whose spirits are ravished by glimpses
And thoughts they can never express.

There are poems unsung and unspoken
That transcend the limits of art,
There are unpainted visions that linger
In the innermost realms of the heart,
There are writers who never have written
And sculptors who delve not in stone,
There are spirits who thrill with a message,
Yet strive on in silence, alone

Mayhap there's fruition and answer
Somewhere in the regions of bliss,
In worlds that are yet undiscovered
For unfulfilled longings in this.
At last they may find their lost visions,
At last they may reach to the goal,
The ones who fall short of expression
And yet who are artists in soul
—Denver News.

Cry of the Broken Hearted.

When the day of battle is ended
And the cruel suspense is past,
When the hours of anguished waiting
Are over, for all, at last,
Then those who are reunited
Will offer their praise to God,
But the lad I have waited and longed for
Lies voiceless under the sod

There are many who climbed the hillside
When they stormed the enemy's post,
There was many a clear outringing
For the triumph of Briton's host,
There were many who stood, unwounded,
Unharmed, at the set of the sun,
But the lad I have waited and longed for—
His day of battle was done

Ere long by many a fireside
They will tell of that gallant fight,
They will praise those warrior heroes,
The power of Britain's might,
They will speak, with awestruck voices,
Of their comrades among the slain,
But the lad I have waited and longed for
Will speak to me never again

You are dead for your queen and your country!
You are dead in your honor and pride!
You are dead that your brother soldiers
Might rise with the triumph tide!
You have paid the price of their glory,
As a soldier would wish to do—
Aye, but my lad that I've longed for,
My heart's just breaking for you!
—London Queen.

His Assets.

The badgering lawyer sometimes succeeds only in affording the witness an opportunity to show off his own wit at the lawyer's expense. And then the spectators are happy.

A certain actor was before the poor debtors' court in New York and testified that his only assets were his salary as a member of the Blank company.

"But you must have something else," said the prosecuting counsel. "Tell the court what else you have."

"That's all."

"What—no personal property?"

"Oh, yes, a dog—and a watch!"

"Now think hard. What else?" persisted the attorney, believing he was on the right track.

"And a case of rheumatism," said the witty witness.

An Earthquake Alarm.

The Japanese are said to have discovered that a few seconds previous to an earthquake the magnet temporarily loses its power, and they have ingeniously constructed a light frame supporting a horseshoe magnet, beneath which is a cup of bell metal. The armature is attached to a weight, so that upon the magnet becoming paralyzed the weight drops and, striking the cup, gives the alarm. Every one in the house then seeks the open air for safety.
